BOYS IN TOURING CHOIR, with eyes fixed on the director, must be all business to keep positions. Jersey boys include: (bottom) Larry Baldwin, Springfield (partly hidden); Douglas Kell-ber is finished and faces glow as Haley says, "That was the best I ever heard you do it. That's what it takes to make it here—hard work."

In another room, where the touring choir is rehearsing with Bryant, the results of the early insistence on perfection are evident. Boys stand straight as soldiers, eyes zeroed on the director. There is no fidgeting or working with scores. With selections memorized, the concentration is on perfecting tones, moods, shades and expressions. Remembering Haleys' command to "demand something of those notes and don't be satisfied with less," they strive for perfection. It is no longer difficult, for they have learned to love music and singing. If Bryant feels it is necessary, they will rehearse for five hours before a concert.

Reminders are more gentle. "During 'My Lord Went a Mournin' some of you boys were smiling. How could you possibly smile during that number?" asked Bryant.

ALMOST ready for the season, the boys polish manners as well as scores. Aware that they portray the school to the public they are eager to paint a good picture. They
